George Wilsey's "True Story" Column by Ray Setterfield

You have to feel a bit sorry for the Rev. William Archibald Spooner, who was born on this day. He became famous as the man who could never say the right thing about anyone or anything – because he was always getting his words mixed up.

For example, in a reference to Queen Victoria, he called for “three cheers for our dear old Queen.” Unfortunately, it came out as “three cheers for our queer old dean!”

He described the Heavenly Father as “a loving shepherd” – or, at least, he tried to. It came out as “the Lord is a shoving leopard!” And he once asked: “Is it kisstomary to cuss the bride?”

But there is little direct evidence that Spooner, who became the Warden of New College, Oxford University, ever said these things...[it] is thought that [one] slip of the tongue prompted students and perhaps fellow academics to make up, probably out of fun, other misquotes and attribute them to Spooner.

Examples are “It’s roaring with pain” for “it’s pouring with rain.” Or “that’s just a lack of pies” for “pack of lies”. Happily, there are those who have a “plaster man” to overcome the problem, even if they haven’t got a “master plan”.

Perhaps in defense of the hapless academic, the Oxford Dictionary Of Quotations lists only one authenticated Spoonerism – though it is not the one he admits to. Discussing the impact of “the rate of wages,” Spooner is quoted as saying: “The weight of rages will press hard upon the employer.”
