A MOVEMENT TO CREATE LITERACY CENTERS IN LAUNDROMATS IS SPREADING INTO KIWANIS COMMUNITIES.

Story and photos by Alyssa Schukar

Wednesdays are special at the World's Largest Laundromat. At 5 p.m., 40 pizzas are delivered to the front desk of the Berwyn, Illinois, business. Slices are handed out until they're gone. Nearby, a magician juggles colorful scarves. The sounds of children's play overwhelm the hums and swooshes of more than 300 dryers and washers in this cavernous 13,500-square-foot building.

Families arrive at the laundromat, largely on foot, from Berwyn, a densely-populated, working-class suburb on Chicago's southwest side. They come, of course, to clean clothes, but also because the World's Largest Laundromat offers much more.

"Before, I didn't like coming to do laundry," says David Duarte, a father of two young daughters. "But there are a lot of things to do here for the kids."
